JECO eNews for October/November 2014

Over Sukkot, I hope you had a chance to sit in a sukkah and connect with nature. I read an interesting D'var Torah by Rabbi Howard Cohen with the following quotation from Gaston Rebuffat, a French mountain guide.

“In this modern age very little remains that is real. Night has been banished, so have the cold, the wind and the stars. They have all been neutralized. The rhythm of life itself is obscured. Everything goes so fast and makes so much noise and people hurry by without heeding the grass by the roadside, its colors, its smell and the way it shimmers when the wind caresses it.”
